To whom it may concern:

Re. Swiss Solar Tech Ltd.

My husband and I moved from Switzerland to the Okanagan Valley four years ago with the thought of building our “dream house” in this sunny area of Canada. As luck would have it, we encountered Roger and Susan Huber of Swiss Solar Tech at one of the first housing exhibitions we attended, CHBA Spring Home Show. We had always been interested in alternative forms of energy, and, in the light of rising energy costs and depleting reserves, both the time and the place appeared right.

Swiss Solar Tech expended much time and effort in offering various possibilities, ranging from a purely solar solution for domestic hot water to an integrated system embodying solar and geothermal energy. We decided on the latter.

We had many setbacks and frustrations in the course of building, but the energy solution offered by Swiss Solar Tech was fortunately not one of them! We have now been in the house for a full year and have never regretted the decision to include the integrated system described above. Summer, in particular, is a time of extremely low energy costs, despite consistent use of an air conditioner, which is also integrated into the system.

As far as service is concerned, we can only recommend Swiss Solar Tech to any potential customers. If only all construction-related companies gave the kind of service SST gives, we would have been spared the many frustrations we encountered!
